THIRTY-THIRD SUNDAY IN ORDINARY TIME — YEAR B

18 NOVEMBER 2018

READINGS: Daniel 12:1-3; Hebrews 10:11-14,18; Mark 13:24-32

We are nearing the end of the Church's year and, understandably, today's Readings speak of the end of time. Daniel's vision is remarkable because it contains the Bible's earliest statement of belief in the resurrection of the dead, and the first mention of 'everlasting life' (FIRST READING).

True to Jesus' prediction, His disciples suffered persecution almost immediately after His death, and St Mark believed this was a sign that Jesus' Second Coming was imminent. The precise time of the end is known only to God. We must not be misled by false rumours, but instead maintain a constant watchfulness as good stewards of what has been entrusted to us (GOSPEL).

NOVENA TO OUR LADY OF PERPETUAL HELP

Gospel Reflection

Preserve me God, I take refuge in you.
 My happiness lies in you alone.
 You are my portion and my cup,
 you yourself are my prize.
 I keep you ever in my sight,
 even at night you direct my heart.
 With you at my right hand, I shall stand firm.
 And so my heart rejoices, my soul is glad.
 For you will not leave my soul among the dead,
 nor let your beloved know decay.
 You will show me the path of life,
 the fullness of joy in your presence,
 at your right hand happiness for ever.

From Psalm 15

My dear people,

This article appears in the current edition of Madonna Magazine — it makes interesting reading and shows what can be done to combat loneliness in our society:

“Since 1995, the Gethsemane Community at Petersham NSW has co-ordinated a Christmas project. This began by providing Christmas presents and cards to men and women with disabilities living in licensed boarding houses.

These people pay almost all their disability pension in board, so they are very poor. Sixty per cent have no contact with family at all. Most of the others see family members only a few times a year. We decided to provide personalised gift parcels of toiletries, socks, underwear (having ascertained correct sizes) and lollies. We provide sugar-free lollies for those who are diabetic. Since these people never receive personal mail, we devised a way to have Christmas cards sent to each person. Privacy is protected by a coded system.

As some of these people moved to aged care, we followed them. At each new facility, we asked if there were other residents who had no family or friends. Then the deluge began. One nursing home gave us 72 names, another 55, the next 80. Some places gave just a few names the first time, then asked if they had to be restricted just to the most desperate and added more. When we delivered three gifts to one place, staff begged us to provide another ten. We now have 820 people on our list.

When we delivered gifts for the first time to a large facility in the inner west of Sydney, some staff members cried. They said they had been so worried about their residents having nothing special for Christmas that they had been thinking of giving everyone a packet of shortbread biscuits.

At a facility on the northern beaches, our volunteer noticed a man sitting out the front. A staff member said he sat there every day waiting for his son, who never visited.

Another helper delivered a parcel to a place where there were many war veterans. He sat with the recipient for hours as the man recounted war stories, enlivened by having someone to listen. When we checked the list the following year, that man had died.

Seven schools now pack some of the parcels and some have ‘adopted’ the people in the places they visit. Some teachers saw the desperate poverty and loneliness of residents in one inner west aged care hostel and decided to keep in touch with them during the year as well. Most of the residents had mental illness, and came from boarding houses, homeless shelters or the streets.

In winter, children knitted beanies and scarves, delivered them, talked to and sang for the people. Students of another 22 schools donate toiletries and socks and feel part of this process of reaching out to lonely and forgotten people. In a growing number of schools, classes use our address labels to write and send Christmas cards. Parishioners of St Patrick’s Church Hill have, for many years now, donated funds and taken labels to send Christmas cards.

Some insight into the process of distancing from family can be seen in the story of Garry. I first met Garry in 1994 at a sub-standard boarding house in the inner west. Garry had travelled the world, had become an alcoholic and developed some brain damage. When the boarding house closed in 1996, Garry went to another such place a suburb away. I kept contact and followed him to a nursing home nearby, then to another some distance away. Since he had no family contact, Gethsemane bought him clothes each season and I visited when I could. Staff recorded my name and details as next of kin. When Garry was taken to hospital and became frail, I tried to find out any family contact details. He had phone numbers for his father and brother, but none worked. There had not been any contact for many years. When Garry died, I was contacted and organised his funeral. Garry’s ashes are buried under the tree in our front garden.

Peter’s story is even sadder. After a boarding house in Leichhardt closed some years ago, staff from Ageing, Disability and Home Care (ADHC) moved 34 residents to an interim facility and began interviewing them. It turned out there should have been 35 people. Where was the other person? It was now May, and it turned out that when he had died in January, his body had been taken to the morgue and was still there. He had lived at that boarding house for 17 years but the owner took no responsibility. One of the licensing staff from ADHC asked me if I could organise a funeral. I did so. Apart from the funeral directors, a priest friend and I were the only mourners. A chaplain from Rozelle hospital later held a memorial service for Peter, invited former residents of the boarding house and scattered Peter’s ashes over a rose garden in the church grounds.

It has been a slow process, because these clients are very shy, but year by year, more of them are willing to come with staff and join us for lunch on Christmas Day. We invited people from group homes, those living alone and people from a nearby boarding house. A sense of community develops among these isolated people as they share the day.

The epidemic of loneliness may pervade all parts of our society. It is a challenge to all of us to be alert and to respond with simple kindness whenever we can.” (Myree Harris RSJ)
